groflo

Launch Email Variants

Mobile Preview | April 2026 | Confidential

Three variants. One goal.

Each variant targets a different motivation for opening and tapping:

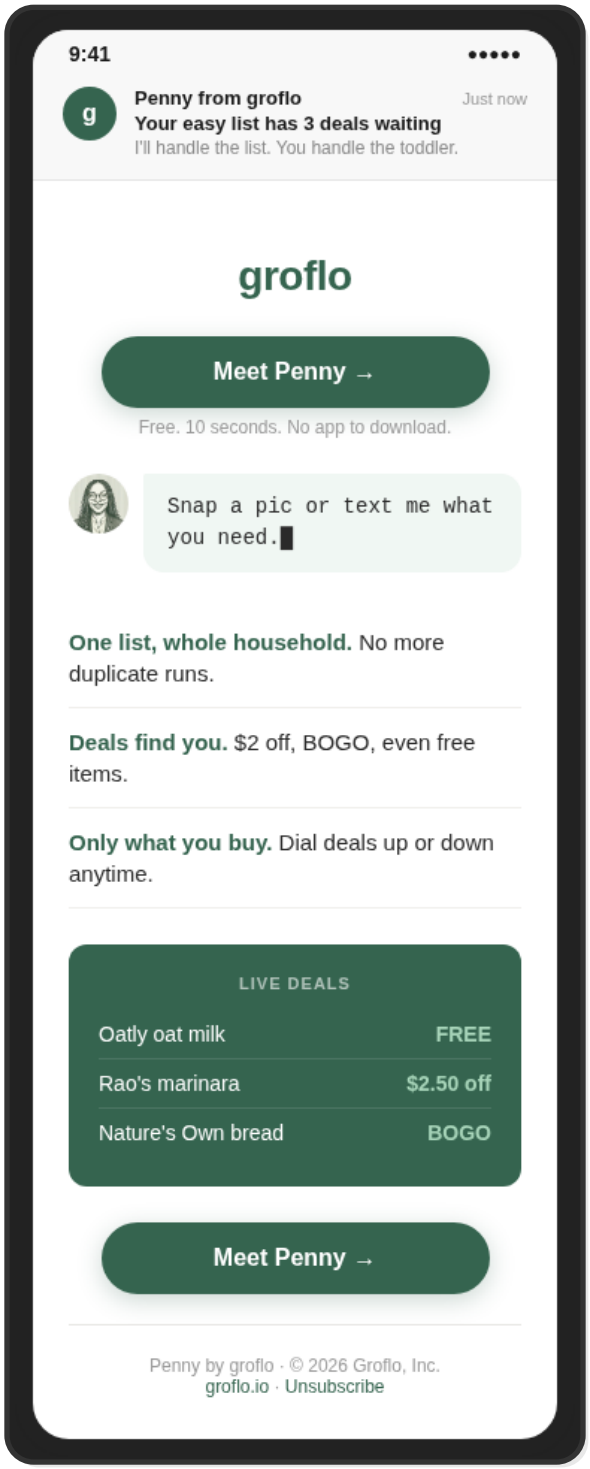

- A Personality — Leads with Penny's character and warmth
- B Deal-led — Leads with live deals in a shopping-list format
- C How-it-works — Leads with a clear 3-step flow

All three share the same structural changes from the panel review:

- ✓ Styled groflo logo
  replaces plain-text "Groflo" — lowercase throughout
- ✓ Penny's illustrated portrait
  replaces the green "P" circle placeholder
- ✓ CTA at top AND bottom
  tappable within first screenful on 375px iPhone SE
- ✓ Benefits above the fold visible without scrolling, even on small phones
- ✓ ~50% fewer words
  Penny's chat bubble: one short sentence per variant
- ✓ Chobani emoji fixed
  was a lollipop — now correct for yogurt

Panel Verdict

Customer Panel: GO WITH CONDITIONS — all 7 conditions met
Product Team: GO WITH CONDITIONS — UX Designer, PM, Growth, QA signed off

Variant A

Personality-led

Leads with Penny as a character. The chat bubble establishes her voice immediately — warm, brief, human. Best for audiences who respond to personality over features.

Strengths

+ Penny's voice is the first thing you see after the CTA. Builds instant rapport.
+ Emotional hook: "I'll handle the list. You handle the toddler." is memorable and specific.
+ Benefits are compact and scannable — three lines, no fluff.
+ Live deals section proves value concretely (FREE, $2.50 off, BOGO).

Watch-outs

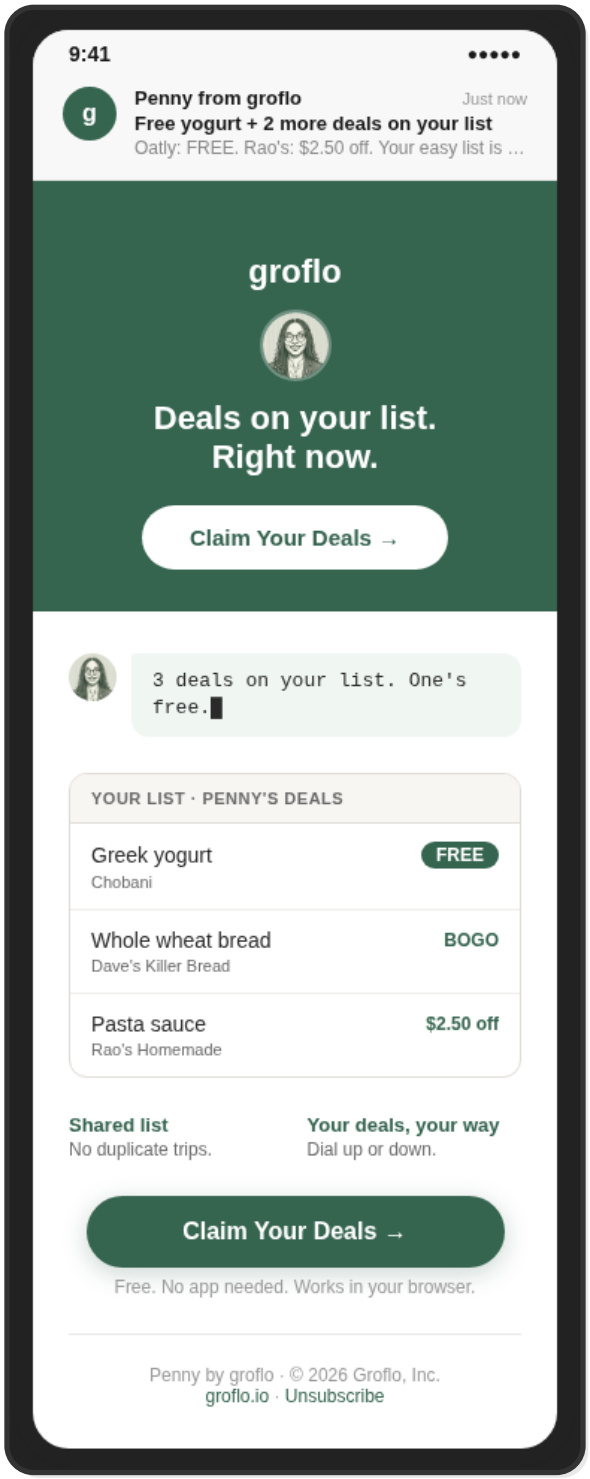

– No visual deal list — the dark box is less skimmable than B's card format.
– "Meet Penny" CTA may feel vague to someone who doesn't know what groflo is.
– No how-it-works explanation — assumes curiosity will carry the click.

Panel notes

Tamika: "The toddler line got me. I'd tap that."

Nadia: "I understand what Penny does from the bubble. Clean."

Devon: "I'd screenshot the deals box — but B's list looks more like my actual grocery app."

Variant B

Deal-led

Leads with the deal itself. The green hero banner creates urgency, and the shopping-list UI mirrors what the user will see in the app. Strongest conversion driver.

Strengths

+ Deal list looks like a real shopping list — instantly recognizable and credible.
+ "Claim Your Deals" is the most action-oriented CTA of the three.
+ Green hero banner stands out in an inbox full of white emails.
+ Chobani FREE badge draws the eye immediately (emoji bug now fixed).

Watch-outs

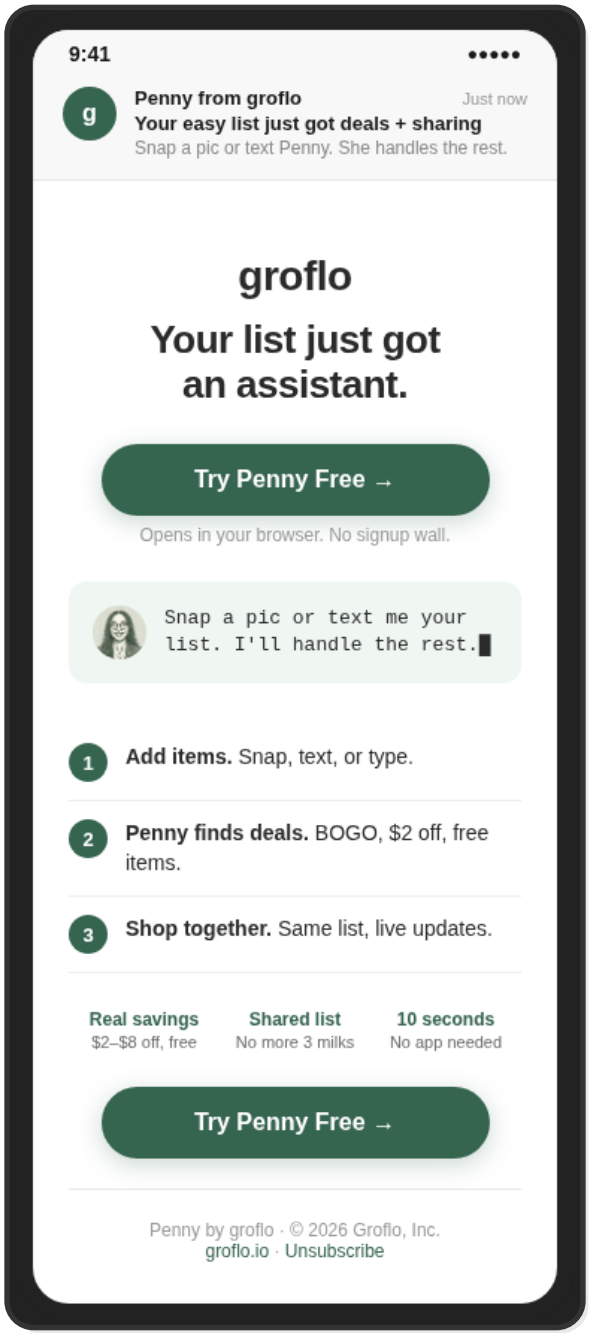

– Penny gets less character time — she's just a small bubble below the banner.
– Could read as "coupon spam" to skeptical users like Marcus.
– The urgency framing ("Right now") may feel pushy if overused.

Panel notes

Linda: "I see money I'm saving. That's all I need."

James: "The shared list benefit is buried. Lead with that for me."

Growth: "Highest predicted click-through. The deal list is proof of value before you sign up."

Variant C

How-it-works

Leads with clarity. Three numbered steps answer "What is this?" before asking for a click. Best for skeptical or first-time users who need to understand before they act.

Strengths

+ Clearest explanation of what groflo actually does. Lowest cognitive load.
+ Three steps are easy to scan and remember: add, deals, share.
+ Stats row (real savings, shared list, 10 seconds) reinforces speed and simplicity.
+ "Try Penny Free" is the lowest-commitment CTA — reduces friction.

Watch-outs

– No live deal examples — doesn't prove value as concretely as A or B.
– More instructional, less emotional. Won't generate screenshots or shares.
– Penny's bubble is the longest of the three — could be trimmed further.

Panel notes

Nadia: "This one I understand without thinking. I'd try it."

Priya: "Where does it say it respects my dietary needs? Missing."

PM: "Best for cold audiences. Pair with B for retargeting."
